QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

Petitioner submits that its application for Writ of Certiorari to the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit presents the following questions for review:

1. Whether the decision of the Court of Appeals is consistent with the intent of the Act and the rationale of this Court's opinion in Bloomer v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 445 U.S. 74, 100 S.Ct. 925 (1980).

2. Whether, in the present factual context, a stevedore may properly be charged, in effect, with a portion of a longshoreman's attorney fees.

3. Whether a longshoreman is entitled to any net recovery when the stevedore's lien has not been satisfied in full.

4. The effect of an abortive appeal by the longshoreman from a lower court judgment which causes the stevedore's lien to be increased and its recovery to be reduced.

CERTIFICATE OF INTERESTED PARTIES

Pursuant to Rule 28.1, Petitioner states that the parent company of Employers National Insurance Company is Employers Casualty Company and that Texas Employers Insurance Association is an affiliated company.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

DECISIONS BELOW

The opinion of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana is not reported. The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit is reported under the style Ochoa v. Employers Nat. Ins. Co., at 724 F.2d 1171 (1984).

JURISDICTION

Petitioner seeks a writ to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit to review its decision and order filed on February 13, 1984. A petition for rehearing and a suggestion for rehearing en banc were denied by the Court of Appeals in an order entered on April 18, 1984. This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §1254(1). The District Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §1332 and 28 U.S.C. §1333.

STATUTE INVOLVED

This petition raises issues under the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, 33 U.S.C. §901, et seq; and more specifically Section 933 which reads:

> COMPENSATION FOR INJURIES WHERE THIRD PERSONS ARE LIABLE
> SEC. 33.(a) If an account of a disability or death for which compensation is payable under this Act the person entitled to such compensation determines that some person other than the employer or a person or persons in his employ is liable in damages, he need not elect whether to receive such compensation or to recover damages against such third person.
> (b) Acceptance of such compensation under an award in a compensation order filed by the deputy commissioner or Board shall operate as an assignment to the employer of all rights of the person entitled to compensation to recover damages against such third person unless such person shall commence an action against such third person within six months after such award.
> (c) The payment in section 44 shall operate as an assignment to the employer of all right of the legal representative of the deceased (hereinafter referred to as "representative") to recover damages against such third person.

(d) Such employer on account of such assignment may either institute proceedings for the recovery of such damages or may compromise with such third person either without or after instituting such proceeding.

(e) Any amount recovered by such employer on account of such assignment, whether or not as the result of a compromise, shall be distributed as follows:

(1) The employer shall retain an amount equal to—

(A) the expenses incurred by him in respect to such proceedings or compromise (including a reasonable attorney's fee as determined by the deputy commissioner or Board);

(B) the cost of all benefits actually furnished by him to the employee under section 7;

(C) all amounts paid as compensation;

(D) the present value of all amounts thereafter payable as compensation, such present value to be computed in accordance with a schedule prepared by the Secretary, and the present value of the cost of all benefits thereafter to be furnished under section 7, to be estimated by the deputy commissioner, and the amounts so computed and estimated to be retained by the employer as a trust fund to pay such compensation and the cost of such benefits as they become due, and to pay any sum finally remaining in excess thereof to the person entitled to compensation or to the representative; and

(2) The employer shall pay any excess to the person entitled to compensation or to the representative, less one-fifth of such excess which shall belong to the employer.

(f) If the person entitled to compensation institutes proceedings within the period prescribed in section 33(b), the employer shall be required to pay as compensation under this Act a sum equal to the excess of the amount which the Secretary determines is payable on account of such injury or death over the amount recovered against such third person.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Jorge Ochoa, a longshoreman employed by New Orleans Stevedoring Company, hereinafter referred to as longshoreman, was injured on October 3, 1978 aboard the M/S THE JOSEPH P. HEWES owned and operated by Waterman Steamship Company. He was paid voluntary compensation benefits under the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act by his employer's carrier, Employers National Insurance Company, hereinafter referred to as stevedore. He subsequently filed suit for damages against the shipowner in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §1332 and §1333; stevedore duly intervened.

His claim for damages was tried to a jury on November 26, 1980 which awarded a gross recovery against the shipowner of $54,437.00. Following the entry of judgment, and contrary to the interests of stevedore, longshoreman appealed to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit on the grounds that quantum of damages awarded was inadequate. The shipowner was prepared to pay the judgment but upon the longshoreman's appeal from the judgment, filed a cross-appeal seeking reversal of the lower court's judgment. Since the judgment against the shipowner was not final, stevedore, at the insistence of longshoreman's counsel, was obliged to continue weekly payment of compensation benefits. At the time of the district court's judgment, stevedore's compensation lien was $27,922.00. During the pendency of the appeal and cross-appeal which were ultimately denied per curiam, the compensation lien increased to $42,025.00 and the gross recovery against the shipowner increased, through interest since date of judgment, to $62,058.00 which sum was duly paid by the shipowner into the registry of the court.

Once the judgment became final, stevedore moved to amend the judgment to reflect its additional compensation payments and to recover its full lien out of the judgment which was granted by the district court over longshoreman's counsel's opposition that this would leave insufficient funds to pay his fee. Longshoreman, through his counsel, appealed alleging that his 40% contingency fee contract was based on the gross recovery and primed stevedore's compensation lien. The Fifth Circuit reversed and concluded inter alia that longshoreman's attorney's fee based on a percentage of the gross recovery primed the compensation lien. The following comparisons are illustrative only:

At the time of the original judgment, the allocation, depending on the priority accepted, was:

LONGSHOREMAN'S COUNSEL	STEVEDORE
$54,437 Judgment	$54,437 Judgment
- 6,263 expenses[1]	- 6,263 expenses
48,174	48,174
- 19,259 Attorney's lien (40% of gross)	- 27,922 comp lien
28,915	20,252
- 27,922 comp lien	- 8,101 Attorney's lien (40% of net)
$ 993 to longshoreman	$12,151 to longshoreman

Thus, prior to longshoreman's abortive appeal against shipowner, stevedore recovers its full lien even under longshoreman's counsel's argument and rationale of the Court of Appeals' decision as Bloomer, supra, squarely controls.

Following the longshoreman's abortive appeal against the shipowner, the stevedore's lien increases to $42,025.00 and the allocation, depending on the priority accepted, is:

LONGSHOREMAN'S COUNSEL	STEVEDORE
$54,437 Judgment ($62,058)[2]	$54,437 Judgment
- 6,263 expenses	- 6,263 expenses

[1] There is no dispute that longshoreman's expenses, when proven and exclusive of attorney's fee, must be paid first.

[2] The Court of Appeals' use of the ultimate amount paid by the shipowner, i.e. $62,058 ($54,437 plus interest), confuses, we submit, an already difficult problem, as all parties would share in the interest paid on the original allocation.

48,174		48,174
- 19,259	Attorney's lien (40% of gross)	- 42,025	comp lien
$28,915	Balance to pay $42,025 lien	$ 6,149
		- 2,460	Attorney's lien (40% of net)
($13,110)	net loss to stevedore	$ 3,689	to longshoreman
zero	to longshoreman

Thus under the Court of Appeals' decision, had longshoreman not appealed, stevedore would have been reimbursed in full instead of losing, because of the appeal, $13,110.00.

Under the decision below, the above figures in the longshoreman's allocation are not fixed since on remand, the district court must first determine the reasonableness of the 40% attorney's fee and then make an equitable adjustment of that figure between the longshoreman and his attorney. The loss to the stevedore, on the other hand, is now a fait accompli.

This petition for writ of certiorari follows.

ARGUMENT

Given the absence in the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, see 33 U.S.C. §933, of an express provision for the payment of attorney's fees where the longshoreman, rather than the employer, effects a recovery against the negligent shipowner, the lower courts have long been troubled by the proper allocation of that recovery as between the longshoreman, his attorney and the compensation carrier. In the Fifth Circuit alone, we have seen Strachan Shipping Co. v. Melvin, 327 F.2d 83 (CA 5 1964); Haynes v. Rederi A/S Aladdin, 362 F.2d 345 (CA 5 1967), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 1020, 87 S.Ct. 731 (1967); Chouest v. A&P Boat Rentals, Inc., 472 F.2d 1026 (CA 5 1973), cert. denied, 412 U.S. 949, 93 S.Ct. 3012 (1974); Mitchell v. Scheepvaart Maatschappij Trans-Ocean, 579 F.2d 1274 (CA 5 1978).

In 1979, this Court broke a long silence and granted certiorari to resolve this recurring question as to which the Courts of Appeals have been divided. This Court's ensuing opinion in Bloomer v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 445 U.S. 74, 100 S.Ct. 925 (1980), in a different factual context,[3] concluded that the stevedore (compensation intervenor) should not be required to pay a share of the longshoreman's attorney's fee and rejected the argument, as measured against the language, structure and history of the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, that equity dictated that the stevedore bear a portion of the longshoreman's attorney's fee in order to effect a greater net recovery for the longshoreman.

This Court noted but did not address the problem in the factual context here presented where the judgment is insufficient to pay in full the plaintiff's attorney's fee based on a percentage of the gross recovery and the compensation lien, Bloomer, supra, at 445 U.S. 85, 100 S.Ct. 932, Footnote 13. This problem is now before the Court.

The first Court of Appeals, post Bloomer, supra, to address the problem was the Seventh Circuit in Johnson v. Sioux City & New Orleans Barge Lines, Inc., 629 F.2d 1244 (CA 7 1980) (per curiam), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 987, 101 S.Ct. 408 (1980) which concluded, based on its interpretation of Bloomer, supra, that longshoreman's attorney's fee should be based on the net recovery, after payment in full of the compensation lien.

[3] The amount of the settlement was sufficient to pay plaintiff's attorney's fee based on a percentage of the total settlement and the compensation lien in full.

The next Court of Appeals, post Bloomer, supra, to address this problem was the Second Circuit in Incorvaia v. Hellenic Lines, Ltd., "GRIGORIOS-C-IV", 668 F.2d 650 (CA 2 1982), cert. denied, __ U.S. __, 103 S.Ct. 293 (1982) which concluded, based on its interpretation of Bloomer, supra, that the stevedore's lien did not prime the plaintiff's attorney's fee based on the gross recovery, likening this fee to other legal expenses which admittedly must be paid first.

Finally, we have the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in the divided opinion below, 724 F.2d 1171 (CA 5 1984), in which the majority of the panel noted the conflict between the Seventh and Second Circuits' opinions, at p. 1175, but, based on this interpretation of Bloomer, supra, reaches still another solution of the problem, namely, that the compensation lien is primed by a reasonable attorney's fee based on the gross recovery, which in turn is subject to equitable allocation between the longshoreman and his attorney, contrary to the rule in the Second Circuit.

At this point, we must add that the present case also contains a factual component which, to our knowledge has never been faced by any of the Courts of Appeals which have sought to resolve this difficult problem, pre or post Bloomer, supra, namely the filing by the longshoreman here of an abortive appeal from the district court's judgment against the shipowner on the issue of damages only, contrary to the stevedore's interests, since it caused the amount of its lien to be increased from $27,922.00 to $42,025.00. Under the rationale of the Second Circuit in Incorvaia, supra, and Valentino v. Rickners Rhederei, G.M.B.H., SS ETHA, 552 F.2d 466 (CA 2 1977), i.e. the beneficiary of the fund theory, the Fifth Circuit's result would not be justified; moreover, the Second Circuit does not permit any recovery by the longshoreman in this factual context. This issue was argued to the Court below in stevedore's original brief and more specifically in its petition for rehearing but is not addressed by the Court of Appeals below in its original opinion or in its order denying rehearing.

CONCLUSION

Thus, in the four years since this Court's opinion in Bloomer, supra, three Courts of Appeals interpreting Bloomer, supra, have reached three conflicting conclusions as to the resolution of the remaining problem. The conflict within the Circuits involving the interpretation of the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act which prompted this Court to grant a writ of certiorari in Bloomer, supra, is again present with these added ingredients, namely the proper inferences to be drawn from this Court's opinion in Bloomer and the fact that, but for the longshoreman's abortive appeal, Bloomer, supra, squarely governed and stevedore would have recovered its lien as it then existed in full.

It is hoped that, notwithstanding this Court's heavy docket, this Court will grant the present petition to complete its resolution of this recurring problem.

A writ of certiorari should issue to the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit to review the issues raised by its decision.

EMPLOYERS NATIONAL INSURANCE CO. et al.,

Intervenors-Appellees,

Waterman Steamship Corp.,

Defendant.

No. 82-3618.

United States Court of Appeals,
Fifth Circuit.

Feb. 13, 1984.

After longshoreman recovered amount in third-party action against negligent shipowner which was insufficient to cover both attorney fees and compensation carrier's lien, dispute arose as how to properly allocate the recovery. The United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana, at New Orleans, Robert F. Collins, J., awarded full reimbursement to the compensation carrier at the expense of the attorney. Longshoreman appealed. The Court of Appeals, Reavley, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) stipulation between longshoreman and intervening carrier with respect to amount of compensation benefits and medical expenses paid to longshoreman or for his benefit did not have effect of giving priority to carrier over payment of attorney fees; (2) lien of compensation carrier was payable out of net recovery in injured longshoreman's third-party action, after costs of litigation, including reasonable fees of longshoreman's attorney, were subtracted; and (3) in view of potential for inequitable results being produced by holding, court should consider whether it is reasonable and equitable for attorney to recover claimed sum while injured longshoreman receives nothing, and court may, in exercise of discretion, require adjustment to assure equity for both longshoreman and his attorney.

Reversed and remanded.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana.

Before WISDOM, REAVLEY and JOHNSON, Circuit Judges.

REAVLEY, Circuit Judge:

Our question is how to allocate money, recovered from a negligent shipowner, as among the injured longshoreman, his attorney, and the stevedore's insurance carrier. We must apply Bloomer v. Liberty Mutual Insurance Co., 445 U.S. 74, 100 S.Ct. 925, 63 L.Ed.2d 215 (1980), to a case in which the recovery is insufficient to cover both the attorney's fee and the compensation carrier's lien. The district court awarded full reimbursement to the compensation carrier at the expense of the attorney.[1] We reverse.

1. The Case Below

The Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, 33 U.S.C. §§ 901-950 (1976) ("the Act"), authorizes an injured longshoreman to bring suit against the responsible party—usually the owner of the vessel on which the injury occurred—within six months after receiving a compensation award. 33 U.S.C. § 933(a), (b). Longshoreman Jorge Ochoa brought suit and recovered $62,058 from Waterman Steamship Corporation for injuries sustained while unloading Waterman's vessel. The stevedore's compensation carrier, Employers' National Insurance Company ("ENI"), intervened in the suit to recover medical expenses and compensation benefits,[2] which totalled $42,024 paid to Ochoa by the time of the judgment. The expenses of the litigation aside from the attorney's fee were $6,263.[3] The $55,795 remaining would

[1] On this appeal all have assumed that the agreement between Ochoa and his attorney set the fee at 40% of the total recovery against the shipowner. At oral argument we were given a retainer agreement, signed by Ochoa, which assigns 50% of "any claim or suit I have or may have in this matter" to the attorney. The compensation carrier denies that Ochoa's agreement with his attorney is to commit a fee computed on the total recovery rather than on what Ochoa receives after the compensation repayment is deducted. If the carrier were correct, there would be no problem, and the carrier would enjoy the priority given it by the trial court's judgment.

[2] When a longshoreman recovers from a negligent shipowner, the stevedore has a lien against the recovery in the amount of the stevedore's compensation payments. See. The Etna, 138 F.2d 37 (3d Cir.1943). The stevedore's compensation insurance carrier often occupies the place of the stevedore. For purposes of this opinion, there is no difference between the entitlement of "stevedore," "compensation carrier," or "carrier."

[3] There will be an issue upon remand over the correct amount of expenses, as there may be on other figures used herein. If so, that will be for the trial court to resolve.

produce an attorney's fee, at 40% of recovery, of $22,318. If that fee were allowed, the compensation carrier would then recover only $33,477, considerably less than the $42,024 required for full reimbursement. On the other hand, if we allowed the compensation carrier the full $42,024, the remaining $13,771 would be considerably less than the $22,318 expected fee. Furthermore, if the attorney takes the $13,771, the longshoreman receives nothing from the recovery against the shipowner.

The original jury verdict was upheld on appeal. Due to additional benefits extended during the time of appeal, the verdict was inadequate to pay fully ENI's compensation lien and Ochoa's attorney's fee. ENI moved in the district court to amend the judgment to reflect ENI's entitlement to be reimbursed for the additional benefits. Ochoa's attorney opposed the motion, since granting it would leave insufficient funds to pay his fee. The district court granted the motion, and Ochoa appeals.

We conclude that a reasonable fee is an expense of the suit that must be deducted before the compensation carrier or stevedore can be reimbursed. If there is nothing left after that computation of expenses and after the compensation carrier's recovery, the trial court should then consider the reasonableness of the recovery as between the longshoreman and his attorney under all of the circumstances and adjust the allocation in favor of the longshoreman if equity so requires.

2. The Stipulation

During the course of the trial the longshoreman through his attorney stipulated with the intervening carrier the amount of the compensation benefits and medical expenses paid to Ochoa or for his benefit. That stipulation stated that this sum would "take precedence over all other claims of plaintiff" if any damages were recovered by plaintiff. The trial court considered that this agreement gave priority to the carrier over the payment of attorney's fees. We do not construe it to have that effect. The objective of the agreement was to resolve any question about the sum of the carrier's payments.[4] Under the law, that repayment does precede payments to the plaintiff longshoreman. We would not construe the agreement to change the legal rules for the payment of the expenses of the suit, in which both intervenors and plaintiff are interested, without language clearly to that effect. See Lamar v. Admiral Shipping Corp., 476 F.2d 300, 303 (5th Cir. 1973) (longshoremen stipulated that compensation benefits would be repaid to stevedore's carrier free of any claim for attorneys' fees).

3. Prior to Bloomer

We now return to a question we have faced previously, although against a different background. In Strachan Shipping Co. v. Melvin, 327 F.2d 83 (5th Cir. 1964), we framed the question for decision: "which of the two liens [a reasonable attorney's fee and the stevedore's subrogation lien] take priority when the recovery is insufficient to pay both liens in full." Id. at 84. We then affirmed the district court's holding that the longshoreman's attorney's fees were included in the expense of litigation, [4] In Chouest v. A & P Boat Rentals, Inc., 472 F.2d 1026 (5th Cir.1973), cert denied, 412 U.S. 949, 93 S.Ct. 3012, 37 L.Ed.2d 1002 (1973), the stevedore's insurance carrier thought that a pretrial stipulation guaranteed the carrier full recoupment of its compensation payments. The Chouest court refused to give the stipulation the effect urged by the carrier. Instead, the court construed the stipulation to reflect an agreement only as to the amount of the medical and compensation payments. Id. at 1029, 1031.

which was a first charge against the fund recovered from the third party tortfeasor.

Subsequent cases construing the Act and the 1972 amendments to the Act have significantly altered the setting in which Melvin was decided. In the present setting, however, we return to the rule that Ochoa's attorney's fees constitute an expense of suit, which must be satisfied before the stevedore's compensation lien attaches to the net recovery.

An injured longshoreman's cause of action is automatically assigned to the stevedore if the longshoreman does not institute suit within six months after receiving a compensation award. 33 U.S.C. § 933(b). The Act explicitly provides for the distribution of the stevedore's recovery on the longshoreman's cause of action. See 33 U.S.C. § 933(e). When the longshoreman sues, however, the Act is silent as to a method of distribution. "[F]illing this statutory lacuna" has been left to the courts. See Mitchell v. Scheepvaart Maatschappij Trans-Ocean, 579 F.2d 1274, 1280 (5th Cir.1978). Due to the lack of statutory specificity, the circuits have disagreed in their interpretations of how the Act applies to claims involving the longshoreman-stevedore-shipowner relationship. One principal dispute, now settled, was whether the stevedore could be charged with a portion of the longshoreman's attorney's fees. The circuits had split three ways on this question. See Bloomer v. Liberty Mutual Insurance Co., 445 U.S. 74, 77 n.3, 100 S.Ct. 925, 927 n. 3, 63 L.Ed.2d 215 (1980).

Mitchell v. Scheepvaart Maatshappij Trans-Ocean, 579 F.2d 1274 (5th Cir.1978), represented this circuit's equitable approach to the problem of distributing the longshoreman's tort recovery from a negligent shipowner among the longshoreman, his stevedore, and his attorney. The Mitchell court refused to apply a priority rule that would rank claims to the fund on a measured, arithmetic basis. Id. at 1279. That approach would be unfair to the injured longshoreman in some circumstances. Instead, the court suggested "application of the equitable rule that he who reaps a harvest for another is entitled to share in the yield." Id. at 1278. Thus, trial courts were directed to inquire into the particular circumstances of a case to determine whether the stevedore should be required to contribute to a reasonable fee for the longshoreman's counsel.

4. Bloomer's Resolution

The Supreme Court resolved the different approaches among the circuit courts in Bloomer v. Liberty Mutual Insurance Co., 445 U.S. 74, 100 S.Ct. 925, 63 L.Ed.2d 215 (1980). The Court rejected the "equitable apportionment" theory of Mitchell and held that the stevedore's compensation lien cannot be taxed to pay part of the longshoreman's attorney's fees. The apportionment or contribution had been justified with the "common-fund" theory: because the longshoreman's attorney helped produce a fund out of which the stevedore was reimbursed for compensation payments, it was fair to charge the stevedore with part of the fee. To resolve the question the Court inquired into the legislative history and Congressional intent behind the Act. Under the Act's "comprehensive scheme," the stevedore is reimbursed after litigation costs, but before any recovery by the longshoreman, when it sues a shipowner pursuant to an assignment from the longshoreman. The stevedore, therefore, bears no part of its legal expense if the recovery covers those expenses and its compensation reimbursement. "There is no reason to believe that Congress intended a different distribution of the expenses of suit merely because the longshoreman has brought the action." Id. at 78, 79, 100 S.Ct. at 923.

5. After Bloomer

Despite Bloomer's clarification, another question has arisen: when the recovery is insufficient to satisfy both the attorney's contingent fee (if properly calculated on the gross) and the compensation lien, which is entitled to be satisfied first? The Second Circuit and the Seventh Circuit, the only post-Bloomer courts to confront the question until now,[5] have reached opposite results. Compare Incorvaia v. Hellenic Lines, Ltd., "Grigorios-C-IV", 668 F.2d 650 (2d Cir. 1982), cert. denied, __ U.S. __, 103 S.Ct. 293, 74 L.Ed.2d 277 (1982) (reasonable attorney's fee has priority; compensation lien applies to net proceeds) with Johnson v. Sioux City & New Orleans Barge Lines, Inc., 629 F.2d 1244 (7th Cir.1980) (per curiam), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 987, 101 S.Ct. 408, 66 L.Ed.2d 251 (1980) (attorney's contingent fee should be calculated on net recovery after satisfaction of compensation lien). Both Incorvaia and Johnson purport to be consistent with the intent of the Act, as interpreted in Bloomer.

It is important to note that the recovery in Bloomer

[5] Since Bloomer, we have decided two cases involving apportionment under the Act. See Pluyer v. Mitsui O.S.K. Lines, Ltd., 664 F.2d 1243 (5th cir.1982); LeBlanc v. Petco, Inc.,647 F.2d 617 (5th Cir.1981), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1085, 102 S.Ct. 644, 70 L.Ed.2d 621 (1981). In LeBlanc, the court applied Bloomer and reversed the district court, which had reduced the compensation lien by one-third. In Pluyer, after longshoreman Pluyer's total damages were reduced by the amount of his negligence, the recovery amounted to $35,536. After the stevedore's compensation lien of $25,640 was satisfied, a net of $9,896 was paid to Pluyer. Neither case contains any reference to attorney's fees. Moreover, there is no indication that in Pluyer or LeBlanc the recovery was insufficient to pay all claims.

was ample to pay substantial amounts to the stevedore, the longshoreman, and the longshoreman's attorney. Under the distribution approved by the Court, Bloomer received a net of over $22,700. Under the rejected approach Bloomer would have received over $28,400. Moreover, the Court stated clearly that it did not address the question of priority where a jury award was insufficient to satisfy both the compensation lien and the attorney's fees. Bloomer, 445 U.S. at 86, n. 13, 100 S.Ct. at 932 n. 13. "[N]othing in our decision suggests that the stevedore's lien has priority over the longshoreman's expenses." Id.

The conflicting results reached by the Second and Seventh Circuits are best explained by their focus on different aspects of Bloomer, applied in the context of an inadequate recovery. For example, the Seventh Circuit in Johnson focused on one of the purposes of the 1972 amendments to the Act—to reduce litigation. Johnson, 629 F.2d at 1249. The Johnson court refused to figure the longshoreman's attorney's contingent fee on the gross recovery. That "approach, which gives the attorney a fee based on the benefit to the stevedore, encourages litigation brought nominally on behalf of the longshoreman in cases where the stevedore's interest is relatively greater that the longshoreman's." Id. By contrast, the Second Circuit in Incorvaia stressed the Bloomer Court's analysis of the Act's legislative history, which indicates that the compensation lien attaches only to the longshoreman's net recovery. Incorvaia, 668 F.2d at 652.

6. Attorney's Fee An Expense of Suit

We cannot avoid the conclusion that Congress intended the compensation lien to come out of the net recovery, after the costs of litigation, including reasonable attorney's fees, are substracted. We are thus aligned with the Second Circuit in Incorvaia. Accord Valentino v. Rickners Rhederei, G.M.B.H., SS Etha, 552 F.2d 466 (2d Cir.1977).

In 1959, Congress amended the Act to eliminate the requirement that an injured longshoreman elect between collecting compensation benefits and suing a third party in tort. "The bill, as amended, provides that an employer must be reimbursed for any compensation paid to the employee out of the net proceeds of the recovery." S.Rep. No. 428, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. 2, reprinted in 1959 U.S.Code Cong. & Ad. News 2134, 2135 (emphasis added). The Bloomer court noted:

> The House version of the amendment would have provided: "[T]he carrier liable for the payment of...compensation shall have a lien on the proceeds of any recovery from [a] third person, whether by judgment, settlement, or otherwise, after the deduction of the reasonable and necessary expenditures, including attorney's fees, incurred in effecting such recovery, to the extent of the total amount of compensation awarded under, or provided, or estimates, by this Act...." H.R.Rep. No. 229, 86 Cong., 1st Sess., 6 (1959). The House passed this version of the amendment, 105 Cong.Rec. 5561-5562 (1959), but later concurred in the Senate version on the evidence [sic] assumption that the Senate version also adopted existing judicial practice. See id., at 15343.

There is no indication that the 1972 amendments expressed any intent that the compensation lien be satisfied before reasonable attorney's fees are deducted from the third-party recovery.[6] The 1972 amendments eliminated the unseaworthiness remedy for longshoremen as well as the shipowner's third-party cause of action against the stevedore. These two changes were intended to reduce litigation and to conserve the resources of stevedores so that they would have sufficient funds to pay increased compensation benefits. See H.Rep. No. 1441, 92d Cong., 2d Sess. 5, reprinted in 1972 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 4698-4705; Bloomer, 445 U.S. at 83-85, 100 S.Ct. at 930-31.

The changes effected by the 1972 amendments—increased compensation benefits, abolition of the unseaworthiness remedy, and elimination of the shipowner's cause of action against the stevedore—no doubt helped accomplish the purpose of achieving a reduction in litigation. We decline, however, to read into those amendments an intent to reduce litigation initiated by longshoremen against negligent shipowners. By assuring the vitality of the longshoremen's third-party cause of action we not only promote the longshoreman's interest, but also assist in conserving stevedore resources, one of the purposes behind the 1972 amendments. Because stevedores are assured of having their compensation liens satisfied from net recoveries, longshoremen's third-party suits inure to the benefit of stevedores. If we were to accept the approach proposed by ENI we would unduly impede the ability of longshoremen to avail themselves of the remedy provided by Congress. "[P]ermitting the compensation lien to come ahead of the attorney's lien would deter counsel from pressing long shoremen's claims on a contingent fee basis except 'where a recovery substantially in excess of the amount of the stevedore's lien is a virtual certainty.' " Incorvaia v. Hellenic Lines, Ltd., "Grigorios-C-IV", 668 F.2d 650, 653 (2d Cir.1982) (quoting Valentino v. Rickners Rhederei, G.M.B.H., SS Etha, 552 F.2d 466, 469 (2d Cir.1977)).

We think that our holding coincides with the Act's "comprehensive scheme," as interpreted in Bloomer. The same rationale that persuaded the Court to hold that the longshoreman should bear fully his own legal expenses, Bloomer, 445 U.S. at 85, 100 S.Ct. at 931, persuades us to maintain the symmetry of the Act.[7] It would be incongruous to favor the compensation lien over the longshoreman's attorney's fee in distributing a longshoreman's tort recovery when the Act specifically provides that, when the stevedore sues on the longshoreman's claim, expenses, including a reasonable attorney's fee, shall be reimbursed before the compensation lien is paid. 33 U.S.C. § 933(e). When using the term "legal expenses" in Bloomer, it is clear that the Court contemplated attorney's fees as being included in those expenses. See Bloomer, 445 U.S. at 76 n. 2, 77 n. 3, 84 n. 9, 100 S.Ct. at 927 nn. 2 & 3, 931 n. 9. In footnote six of Bloomer the Court cited legislative history stating that the longshoreman was entitled to deduct his expenses from the third-party recovery. Id. at 81 n. 6, 100 S.Ct. at 929 n. 6. Under Fontana, "the expenses of suit, including attorney's fees, represent the first charge on the recovery against the third party." Bloomer, 445 U.S. at 86 n. 13, 100 S.Ct. at 932 n. 13. *See Chouest v. 7. Reasonableness of the Fee

By holding that attorney's fees are part of the longshoreman's expenses that are recovered prior to satisfaction of the compensation lien, we stress that only reasonable attorney's fees are allowed. In every case involving distribution of a longshoreman's tort recovery, district courts should assess the reasonableness of the longshoreman's attorney's fee. See Cappel v. Adams, 434 F.2d 1278 (5th Cir.1970) (reasonableness of attorney's contingent fee contract within court's discretion.); see also Johnson v. Sioux City & New Orleans Barge Lines, Inc., 629 F.2d 1244, 1248 n. 6 (7th Cir.1980) (per curiam), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 987, 101 S.Ct. 408, 66 L.Ed.2d 251 (1980). We continue to "reject any formula under which the plaintiff's contract with counsel would automatically govern" the amount or percentage of the longshoreman's attorney's fee. Mitchell v. Scheepvaart Maatschappij Trans-Ocean, 579 F.2d at 1282. Our cases have approved of percentage contingent fees not because plaintiff's contract governed, but because the court determined that such fees were reasonable. See id. at n. 11 (citing Chouest v A & P Boat Rentals, Inc., 472 F.2d 1026 (5th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 412 U.S. 949, 93 S.Ct. 3012, 37 L.Ed.2d 1002 (1973), and Strachan Shipping Co. v. Melvin, 327 F.2d 83 (5th Cir.1964)); see also Incorvaia v. Hellenic Lines, Ltd.,

"Grigorios-C-IV", 668 F.2d 650, 653 n. 4 (2d Cir.1982), cert. denied, __ U.S. __, 103 S.Ct. 293, 74 L.Ed.2d 277 (1982) ("reasonableness of the attorney's fee may be challenged, lest it encroach unduly on the net proceeds").

8. Allocation of the Recovery

Subject to a contrary agreement between the affected parties, the allocation of the money recovered from a negligent third party is made in the following manner. First, the out of pocket expenses are deducted. Then the attorney's fee, if the court approves it as reasonable, is deducted. The carrier's repayment then takes priority. In the present case, after deducting expenses of $6,263 there is $55,795 for allocation. If the attorney is entitled to a reasonable fee of 40% of that amount, the sum of $22,318 is deducted for that purpose. The balance and no more, of $33,477 goes to the compensation carrier.

9. Equitable Adjustment

We acknowledge that in some circumstances, our holding has the potential for producing inequitable results. This is the case where the longshoreman's attorney receives a substantial fee by applying the percentage to the gross recovery, but the longshoreman receives little or nothing because the stevedore's compensation lien consumed the net. See Strachan Shipping Co. v. Melvin, 327 F.2d 83, 86-94 (5th Cir.1964) (Brown, J., dissenting) (Melvin rule without adjustment subordinates interest of injured worker to that of lawyer on contingent fee); see also Incorvaia, 668 F.2d at 653 n. 4 (contrasting concededly reasonable fee of one-third of modest verdict in Incorvaia with "undesirable consequences" produced by a 40% attorney's fee applied to substantial recoveries illustrated by Judge Brown's dissent in Melvin). The fairness of the final allocation between the longshoreman and his attorney is a different matter from the reasonableness of the attorney's fee for services rendered in obtaining the total recovery from the negligent tortfeasor. Others have perceived unfairness in a situation where payment of a substantial attorney's contingent fee and the compensation lien leaves a small amount or nothing for the injured longshoreman. For example, the Mitchell court noted that plaintiff's counsel declined to charge a one-third contingent fee based on the gross recovery. Describing such a fee as "grossly unjust," plaintiff's counsel instead charged the client one-third of the net recovery. Mitchell, 579 F.2d at 1278 n. 6.

In Scozzari v. Jade Co., 350 F.Supp. 801 (E.D.N.Y.1972), the court construed the Act and concluded that the compensation lien attaches to "proceeds net of plaintiff's attorney's fee and other expenses necessary to secure the fund." Id. at 804. The Scozzari court then considered the case where the fund is insufficient to cover both the attorney's fee and the compensation lien and noted that "it would be inequitable to permit...an injured worker to receive nothing while his counsel receives a substantial fee." Id. at 806. The court held, as a matter of equity, that plaintiff's counsel "should share his recovery equally with plaintiff," Id. Contra Valentino v. Rickners Rhederei, G.M.B.H., SS Etha, 552 F.2d 466, 470 n. 5 (2d Cir.1977) (longshoreman's attorney cannot share fee with longshoreman).

We think that the Scozzari approach is commendable, although we decline to set any certain division between attorney and client in insufficient recovery cases. District courts, however, have discretion to adjust an attorney's fee so that the injured longshoreman can share in the recovery. In reviewing the matter, the court should consider whether it is reasonable and equitable for the attorney to recover, for example, $22,318, while the injured longshoreman receives nothing. If the attorney has earlier obtained a fee for securing compensation benefits for the longshoreman, a double recovery should be avoided.[8] District courts should take care not to impair the incentive of counsel. A fair return for the attorney should be allowed, determined under all the circumstances.[9] With that consideration in mind, however, the trial court in the exercise of discretion may require an adjustment to assure equity for both the longshoreman and his attorney.

We do not think that Bloomer prevents this equitable adjustment. Bloomer clearly does not allow an adjustment of the stevedore's recovery to contribute toward the longshoreman's attorney's fees. By contrast, our adjustment operates only as between the longshoreman and his attorney. The compensation lien on the net recovery remains inviolable, consistent with Bloomer. Allowing an equitable adjustment between longshoreman and attorney, however, mitigates the effect of that rule in insufficient recovery cases.

The District Court's judgment of September 20, 1982, amended September 24, 1982, is reversed. The case is remanded for reconsideration and reallocation of the original recovery consistent with this opinion.

REVERSED and REMANDED.

WISDOM, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

I respectfully dissent. The majority opinion reflects a thoughtful and conscientious effort to come to grips with a difficult problem. I cannot concur, however, because I find the result irreconcilable with the Supreme Court's interpretation of the Act in Bloomer.

As the majority recognizes, Bloomer held that "the stevedore's compensation lien cannot be taxed to pay part of the longshoreman's attorney's fees". 724 F.2d at 1174. In Bloomer, the Supreme Court repeatedly stressed that Congress intended that the stevedore should recover "the full amount" of its lien from the third-party recovery and that the longshoreman's legal fees should be borne by the longshoreman "alone".[1] Yet the unavoidable result of the majority's approach is to defeat a full recovery by the stevedore by effectively forcing it to pay part of the [1] "The legislative history [of the 1959 amendments] demonstrates that Congress did not intend to alter the rule allowing the stevedore to recover the full amount of its lien from the longshoreman's third-party recovery." 445 U.S. at 80-81, 100 S.Ct. at 929 (emphasis added).

"[I]n 1972 Congress was informed of, but did not alter, the uniform rule that the longshoreman's legal fees would be paid by the longshoreman alone." Id. at 85, 100 S.Ct. at 931 (emphasis added).

"[T]he stevedore [s]hould be reimbursed in full for his compensation payment." Id. at 86, 100 S.Ct. at 932 (emphasis added).

"[O]ur review of the Act and its legislative history persuades us that Congress intended the stevedore to recover the full amount of its lien, regardless of who brings the action." Id. at 87 n. 14, 100 S.Ct. at 932 n. 14 (emphasis added).

"[Under a contrary holding, the] stevedore would not obtain reimbursement for the full amount of its compensation payment, but would instead have that amount reduced by a possibly substantial legal fee." Id. at 87, 100 S.Ct. at 932-933 (emphasis added).

longshoreman's attorney's fees. Under the majority's approach, Mr. Ochoa's attorney will recover $22,318 (subject to equitable adjustment) and ENI will recover $33,477. If ENI had been granted priority, however, it would have recovered the full amount of its compensation lien—$42,025. By granting priority to the attorney's fees, the majority in effect compels ENI to pay $8548 of those fees. This amount is 38 percent of the fees; if the district court decreases the attorney's fees under its power of equitable adjustment, the percentage paid by ENI will increase even further. I cannot reconcile this result with Bloomer.

As the Second Circuit did in Incorvaia, the majority finds support for its position in the legislative history of the 1959 amendments to the Act. See 724 F.2d at 1175-1176; Incorvaia, 668 F.2d at 652. Such reliance is misplaced, for the 1959 amendments were designed specifically to facilitate third-party suits. See Bloomer, 445 U.S. at 80, 100 S.Ct. at 929. This congressional purpose was modified in the 1972 amendments, the primary purposes of which were to reduce litigation and to conserve stevedores' resources so that the stevedores would be better able to pay the substantial increases in compensation benefits mandated by the 1972 amendments:[2]

[2] The majority's concern for maintaining the logical symmetry of the Act is misguided. The majority finds it "incongruous to favor the compensation lien over the longshoreman's attorney's fee in distributing a longshoreman's tort recovery when the Act specifically provides that, when the stevedore sues on the longshoreman's claim, expenses, including a reasonable attorney's fee, shall be reimbursed before the compensation lien is paid". 724 F.2d at 1176. There is no incongruity in this result, because of the congressional policy of conserving stevedores' resources. Any asymmetry is irrelevant. Cf. O. Holmes, The Common Law 1 (1886): "The life of the law has not been logic, it has been experience."

> "The legal expenses incurred by stevedores in connection with third-party actions were understood to be a major obstacle to the funding of increased compensation payments. Numerous witnesses testified that third-party actions frequently inured to the benefit of lawyers, depleting the stevedore's resources and congesting the courts without aiding the injured employee."

Bloomer, 445 U.S. at 85, 100 S.Ct. at 931; see also id. at 82-86, 100 S.Ct. at 930-932; Johnson, 629 F.2d at 1249.

The majority acknowledges these purposes behind the 1972 amendments, but responds by arguing that its approach will ultimately aid stevedores by encouraging third-party suits and thus making it more likely that stevedores will receive reimbursement for the compensation payments. See 724 F.2d at 1176. The exact same argument was made, and rejected by the Supreme Court, in Bloomer. See 445 U.S. at 86 & n. 12, 100 S.Ct. at 932 & n. 12. As the Seventh Circuit has noted, the Act has its own incentive scheme regarding negligence suits against shipowners:

> "In the event the longshoreman does not bring suit against the shipowner within six months—presumably because there is little potential for substantial recovery over and above the compensation award—the stevedore, using its own attorneys and making its own assessment of the likelihood and amount of recovery, can bring suit. That statutory mechanism encourages the stevedore to sue when the negligence claim appears meritorious but the longshoreman's potential incremental recovery is small. Thus, [giving the attorney's fees priority over the compensation lien] encourages litigation brought nominally on behalf of the longshoreman in cases where the > stevedore's interest is relatively greater than the longshoreman's. Such reflexive litigation brought on behalf of a party with minimal interest in the outcome is inconsistent with the Act's 'special incentives designed to encourage the stevedore to bring suit on its own if the longshoreman elects not to do so.' Bloomer, 445 U.S. at 86 n. 12 [100 S.Ct. at 932 n. 12]. Congress, we believe, intended that the stevedore pursue those cases rather than the longshoreman's attorney, who may be motivated by an artificially inflated contingent fee."

Johnson, 629 F.2d at 1249 (citations omitted).

As the Supreme Court noted in Bloomer, a principal concern underlying the recognition of the stevedore's compensation lien has been the prospect that the longshoreman would receive a "double recovery"—a total recovery in excess of the amount he would have received solely through his third-party action—while the stevedore would not receive full reimbursement. See 445 U.S. at 79, 100 S.Ct. at 928. That prospect was a principal concern in the Bloomer opinion itself. See id. at 80, 87, 100 S.Ct. at 929-932. In any insufficient-recovery case, such as the present one, the longshoreman has already received compensation benefits in an amount greater than the net recovery he would have obtained in his negligence action alone.[3] To grant the longshoreman's attorney's fees priority over the compensation lien, and thus effectively to tax the stevedore for part of the attorney's fees, flies in the face of Bloomer. The Supreme Court stated in that case:

[3] In the present case, Mr. Ochoa has received $42,025 in compensation benefits. His net recovery from a third-party suit alone would have been $33,477—the amount of the judgment left after expenses and attorney's fees are deducted.

> "To force the stevedore to [pay part of the longshoreman's legal expenses],...would guarantee the longshoreman a total recovery in excess of the amount he received in his third-party action. Solely by virtue of the compensation scheme, then, the longshoreman would receive a greater sum than would be possible in an ordinary suit for damages. At the same time the stevedore would be prevented from recovering the full amount of its compensation payment. The courts concluded that these results would violate legislative purposes...."

445 U.S. at 80, 100 S.Ct. at 929 (emphasis added). The effect of the majority's decision is precisely the result avoided in Bloomer.[4]

I believe that the better result would be to follow the approach of the Seventh Circuit in Johnson: allow the stevedore to recover first against the longshoreman's judgment, then assess a reasonable attorney's fee in the light of the amount remaining. This approach is consistent with the Supreme Court's interpretation of the Act. The majority's approach is not.

[4] As the majority notes, the Bloomer opinion states that it does not address the issue of priority of liens in an insufficient-recovery situation. 445 U.S. at 86 n. 13, 100 S.Ct. at 932 n. 13. Such a footnote qualification cannot support a result contrary to the reasoning of the opinion.

WATERMAN STEAMSHIP CORPORATION

The above entitled matter came before the Court on motion of the intervenor, Employers National Insurance Company (hereinafter ENI), to amend judgment to reflect, and give priority to, the increases in compensation and medical benefits incurred during the pendency of the appeal of this Court's judgment.

WHEREFORE, after careful consideration of the arguments of counsel, the relevant facts, and the applicable law, the Court will and hereby does GRANT intervenor's motion to amend judgment.

REASONS

Nearly two years ago, a jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, Jorge Ochoa, and against defendant, Waterman Steamship Corporation, in the amount of $54,437.25, including medical expenses added to the jury verdict as stipulated by the parties. ENI intervened in this action to recover medical expenses and compensation benefits paid to Mr. Ochoa pursuant to the Longshoremen and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act (hereinafter LHWCA). At the time of the jury verdict, the compensation lien totaled $27,921.73, and in accordance with a joint stipulation entered between the parties, the judgment of this Court ordered that the intervenor recover by preference and priority. The plaintiff proceeded to appeal the jury verdict. During the pendency of the appeal, ENI paid additional benefits to Mr. Ochoa pursuant to LHWCA. The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals ultimately upheld the original jury verdict, and ENI seeks to have the Court's judgment amended to reflect the $14,103.22 in benefist paid to Mr. Ochoa during the appeal. Plaintiff's attorney opposes the motion to amend judgment on the grounds that the judgment is not sufficient to cover both the compensation lien and the attorney lien. Therefore, if the compensation lien is granted priority under the amended judgment, there will not be sufficient funds to satisfy the attorney lien. Similarly, if the attorney lien is given priority, there will not be sufficient funds to satisfy the compensation lien.

Counsel have thoroughly researched and briefed the Court on this matter. The Fifth Circuit jurisprudence is somewhat confusing. In some cases, the attorney lien was given priority, and the attorney's fees in effect "came off the top." Chouest v. A & P Boat Rentals, Inc., 472 F.2d 1026 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 412 U.S. 949 (1973); Strachan Shipping Company v. Melvin, 327 F.2d 83 (5th Cir. 1964). In another decision, the Fifth Circuit held that the compensation lien came first and the attorney's fees were then computed on the "net" recovery. Haynes v. Rederi, 362 F.2d 345 (5th Cir. 1966). These inconsistencies can be reconciled under the "equitable apportionment" theory articulated in Mitchell v. Scheepvaart Moatschappy Trans-Ocean, 579 F.2d 1274 (5th Cir. 1978). Under the equitable apportionment approach, the compensation insurer may be, in certain circumstances, charged with a portion of plaintiff's attorney's fees because the insurer benefits from the efforts of the plaintiff's attorney. Bloomer v. Liberty Mutual Insurance Co., 445 U.S. 74 (1980), rejected the equitable apportionment theory, holding that the compensation insurer could not be assessed a portion of plaintiff's attorney's fees. Instead, the insurer is entitled to be reimbursed for the full amount of the lien. Bloomer, however, involved a situation where the amount recovered was sufficient to cover both the compensation lien and the attorney's fees. Bloomer did not address the situation, as we have here, where the amount in recovery cannot satisfy both the compensation lien and the attorney's fees. Id. at 86 n.13. The Court has been unable to locate any post-Bloomer Fifth Circuit decisions on this issue.[1] The Court can only assume that the Fifth Circuit equitable apportionment approach is still applicable in the instant matter.

In the present case, the Court is convinced that the compensation lien should be paid in full without reduction for any portion of plaintiff's attorney's fees. There is a joint stipulation entered between the parties which states in pertinent part: "The undersigned parties...stipulate that if any damages are recovered by plaintiff by way of verdict or settlement that they be so apportioned in the judgment that the claim of Employers National Insurance Company for medical expenses and compensation benefits paid shall take precedence over all other claims of plaintiff." The clear intent of the parties is to give the compensation lien first priority. The plaintiff's attorney apparently believes that he is not bound by the stipulation because it refers only to other claims of plaintiff and not to his claim for attorney's fees. Plaintiff's attorney signed this joint stipulation and, therefore, he knew that the intent of this stipulation was to give priority to the compensation lien. At no point has counsel submitted any document which purports to reserve priority for his fees. The stipulation is silent on this point, and so is the retainer agreement signed by the plaintiff. Considering all of these facts, the Court can only conclude that the parties intended that the plaintiff's attorney's fees be assessed after the compensation lien has been paid in full. Johnson v. Sioux City & N.O. Barge Lines, 629 F.2d 1244 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 987 (1980).

[1] In Pluyer v. Mitsui O.S.K. Lines, Ltd., 664 F.2d 1243, 1245 n.2 (5th Cir. 1982), the compensation lien was fully reimbursed even though the judgment was apparently inadequate to cover both the compensation lien and the attorney's fee. This issue, however, was not discussed in the Opinion.

Furthermore, at the time the original judgment was entered, that is before the appeal, the amount in recovery was apparently sufficient to cover both the compensation lien and the attorney's fees. Hence, under Bloomer, the ENI was entitled to be reimbursed in full, as reflected in the original judgment. Now, because of compensation benefits paid during the appeal, the funds no longer satisfy the demands of both the compensation insurer and the plaintiff's attorney. By seeking to reduce the compensation lien in order to satisfy his fees, plaintiff's counsel is in effect billing ENI for an appeal which ENI had no interest in pursuing. The Court believes that the risks incurred in the appeal should be properly borne by the plaintiff and his attorney. Accordingly, the Court will GRANT the insurer's motion to amend judgment.
